■ Unemployment Procedures in Japan

If a foreigner working in Japan loses his/her job, there are a number of procedures which need to be undertaken. If the person involved was making payments via his/her employer to a health insurance or pension plan, the benefits from these cease with the job. So the person needs to enter the national health insurance and national pension schemes, which can be done by heading to his/her local town hall. However, if the person recently made unemployed becomes the dependant of working family members, they can be placed in the same scheme as those working members. The former worker may decide to continue paying into the former scheme with his/her own money. If all criteria are met to receive unemployment benefit, the applicant must take his/her unemployment form to the nearest Hello Work office, and fill in an application to receive the benefit. Depending on the reason for unemployment a 3 month limit may be placed on benefit payments. Residential status may be revoked if the person involved has restrictions on the type of work allowed, and does not provide sufficient reasons for not being employed in such work. Also, if the type of work or employer changes, foreign residents must visit their local town hall to alter the information on their alien registration card.

■ German Consulate General Osaka-Kobe

The Osaka-Kobe German Consulate General is the only one of its kind in Japan. Its history goes back far into the Meiji era, but recent history has found its way even into the name of the institution itself: After decades of successful work in Kobe, the big earthquake of 1995 hit us hard. The consulate was completely destroyed. At least, at 5 o'clock in the morning neither staff nor visitors were present. Thus, fortunately, no one was hurt, but the whole office had virtually disappeared in a moment.

Consequently we had to look for a new location and found office space available in the then newly built Umeda Sky Building in Osaka. Ever since we have resided on the 35th floor of its East Wing, being in charge of 29 prefectures of Western and Southern Japan. Please feel free to come by and visit us!

150 Years of German-Japanese Exchange

What is our most prominent activity these days? To explain this we have to go back in history exactly 150 years. In the fall of 1860, a Prussian expedition to East Asia led by Count Friedrich Albrecht zu Eulenburg debarked in Edo bay and effected a treaty of amity and commerce - the foundation of our long-standing and friendly relations. To celebrate this friendship, from fall 2010 to fall 2011 events of all sizes are scheduled to take place in Germany as well as in Japan. The future in sight, we would like to „raise the treasures of our common past “ so as to build a bridge to the future. Our aim is not only to foster the old-established ties but also to create new bonds, to knit together Germany and Japan using new media and to „win the hearts of the youth for each other “. We would like to particularly motivate young people to develop interest an interest in exchange between Germany and Japan.

Who can participate? Everybody! Cultural institutes, mediator organizations, cultural societies, twinned municipalities, companies as well as involved individuals who stage or would like to support events referring to the German-Japanese relations are asked to get in touch with the organizers.

German Christmas Market

The best way to find out about us today is to visit the German Christmas Market located between the towers of Umeda Sky Building, just below our windows. Complete your day with German Bratwurst, a cup of Gluehwein and some nice christmas presents for your beloved ones!

■Idoling Stop!

Hi everyone, Richard here again.

As my friends and family will tell you I am bit a of a snob when it comes to music. Well, I know what I like and what I don' t, and what I definitely don' t like is manufactured pop music. Unfortunately the majority of mainstream music in Japan is of the manufactured pop variety, and if you only watch TV you' d be mistaken for thinking that is all there is!

Where boy bands are concerned nearly every group is managed by a
